Secure Nexus Endpoint Detection & Response (EDR) provides real-time monitoring, threat detection, and managed response, protecting devices, data, and users

Secure Nexus EDR combines behaviour-based detection, automated threat response, and expert-led monitoring to secure endpoints across Windows, macOS, and Linux.

By continuously observing processes, memory, and activity, suspicious behaviour, including zero-day or fileless attacks, is identified early, ensuring devices remain protected, recoverable, and resilient against evolving cyber risks.

Ensuring Secure Productivity

Effective endpoint security reduces operational risk, limits breach impact, and safeguards critical data. Automated remediation accelerates response times, reduces alert fatigue, and frees security teams to focus on meaningful incidents.

Organisations gain confidence knowing endpoints are continuously monitored, threats are mitigated proactively, and productivity is maintained across remote, hybrid, or on-site workforces.

Expert-Guided Endpoint Protection

Every deployment is tailored to the organisation's environment. UK-based SOC specialists provide 24x7 monitoring, threat intelligence, and actionable guidance. Cloud-native EDR agents integrate with RMM and SIEM tools, enabling centralised visibility.

Combining automation, structured processes, and human expertise, Secure Nexus ensures end-to-end coverage, operational efficiency, and rapid containment of security incidents.

Secure Nexus EDR provides monitoring, threat detection, automated remediation, and expert response, protecting Windows, macOS, and Linux across hybrid environments.

How It Works

Secure Nexus EDR covers continuous monitoring, fileless attack detection, automated threat response, advanced correlation, and contextual alert mapping using MITRE ATT&CK. Centralised dashboards provide unified visibility, while expert guidance ensures rapid containment, policy enforcement, and compliance reporting. Add-ons include threat intelligence integration and detailed endpoint analytics for proactive risk management.
